KNOW THYSELF.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled THE SCIENCE OF LIFE; OR, SELF-PRESERVATION. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jewelled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than 50 valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Jos. S. Fisher, president, W. I. P. Ingraham, vice-president, W. Paine, M.D., C. S. Gaunt, M.D., H. J. Doucet, M.D., R. H. Kline, M.D., J. R. Hollowbush, M.D., R. The Four Seasons.

BY [illegible]

In the balmy April weather,
My love, you know,
When the flowers began to grow,
What walks we took together,
What sighs we breathed together,
What vows we pledged together,
In the days of long ago!

In the golden summer weather,
My love, you know,
When the mowers went to mow,
What homes we built together,
What labors we watched together,
What plans we planned together,
While the skies were aglow!

In the rainy autumn weather,
My Love, you know,
When the winds began to blow,
What tears we shed together,
What wounds we bound together,
What hopes we lost together,
When we laid our darlings low.

In the wild and wintry weather,
My love, you know,
With our heads as white as snow,
What prayers we pray together,
What tears we share together,
What heaven we seek together,
For our time has come to go!

But had no young man to caress her—

Because, you see, she had given the mitten to the only fellow in the neighborhood, and the amount of sweetness she was therefore obliged to waste upon the desert air

Was simply enough to distress her.

—The question is frequently asked, "Why are ministers' sons so much worse than the sons of other men?" Because, perhaps, being aware that their papas are detained by their calling from becoming acquainted with the many forms of naughtiness extant, they wish to give the reverend gentlemen the best second-hand experience that it is in their power to bestow. If that is not the right answer our second guess is, because they are not.

LADIES' COLUMN.

A Leap Year Proposal.

A young man residing in this city received the following "proposal" a day or two ago, which proved too much for his naturally weak-minded youth. It runs thusly:

Stay, gentle being, give me heed,
As kneeling humbly by thy side,
With lacerated heart I plead
That I may be thy blushing bride;
I sigh—I wildly long to press
Thee to my heart—I know 'tis rash;
I pine to paint a fond caress
Upon thy meek and mild moustache.

Why, tell me why thine eyelids droop;
Why turn away so pettishly?
Say, while with fierce tumultuous flap,
Thy bosom heaves unquestionably;
I know thou'rt young and fair
As tiny birds in early spring,
But thou shalt be my constant care,
Thou frail and fragile little thing.

I'll sew thy shirts and mend thy hose,
Thy victuals cook, the fire will light;
I'll grease thy gracious Grecian nose
Each snowy wintry night.
So sweetly thou'dst not tell me "nay,"
And bid me dying, quit thy side,
Brace up, pull down thy vest and say,
That I may be thy blushing bride.

Fashion Notes.

—Poppy-red replaces ruby and cardinal.

—Plain grenadines are out of the market.

—Stiff goods are out of favor always, excepting silk.

—Plush makes prettier bows for the hair than velvet.

—Eighteen inches is the length of parasol ribs this season.

—Using mucilage instead of starch gives Breton lace a pretty color.

Ball tassels and rosettes of ribbon are placed on the top of sunshades.

—Brocades in several shades of gold color are the richest dress goods.

—Acacia blossoms in lilac color are among the new bonnet garnitures.

—Not more than two curls are worn when the hair is dressed for the evening.

—Yellow lace, with reddish gold dots, is shown for the benefit of red-headed girls.

—It is the heir apparent to the Grand Duchy of Baden that the Princess Beatrice is to marry now.

—The changeable silks have found a place where they are welcome. It is inside the new sun-umbrellas.

—Pansies are suggested as a more suitable floral garniture for the costume of a middle-aged bride than orange blossoms.

—Bonnet-strings are tied in a bow behind and below the left ear quite obscuring the side face of the wearer from any one sitting behind her.

—Orang-outang is the most truly descriptive word that one can use when speaking of a woman who wears bangs drawn down to her eyebrows.

—Collarettes and lace scarfs should never be tied. Fastening them with ornamental pins preserves their freshness and secures a graceful arrangement.

—Lace sleeves will be worn this summer with evening dress. The square opening at the throat is filled in with lace so arranged as to be perfectly transparent.

—Ribbons grow more and more gorgeous, and no color seems too brilliant to be used, either by itself or in combination with others, as a trimming for a bonnet.

—Mantles have the sleeve cut in the shoulder piece this year rather than drawn from the back, and the effect is to obviate the ugly flatness of many of the old shapes.

—The petticoats of thin flannel worn under lawn tennis gowns are embroidered around the edge, with the delicate intention of exhibiting the work when the dress is raised. This seems wicked, doesn't it?

—Aprons of crash or sheeting are the proper things to wear in the morning. They are trimmed with embroidery on a band of turkey red twill, or with vines cut from turkey red and chain-stitched directly on the garment.

—Elastic polonaises reaching nearly on the hem of the short skirt, are woven in one piece, and finished with deep points around the lower edge. These garments button in the back, and have a drapery of the same stuff.

The variegated straws are exceedingly difficult to trim with good taste, but [illegible]

—Curtains are so numerous in modern houses that some rooms may be said to be draped and to have spaces covered with paper set in at intervals. Curtains hide windows, doors, closets and [illegible] and half conceal the mirrors.

Ten Thousand Miles for a Husband.

From Watertown N. Y., to Australia is a long and weary way—ten thousand miles or more—but a young woman has had the courage to set out alone on the journey, and she is a servant-girl. A gentleman who was well-to-do fell in love with her and offered to marry her, but she would not believe that he meant what he said. One day in August a year ago he told her that his physician had advised him to seek the sunshine of Australia in order to regain his failing health. He said he had great faith in the balmy climate of the distant island, and he told her that he had decided to go, but he would not start without first being bound to her by that bond which "no man shall put asunder." He said they would be married and then he would journey with a light heart to his new home, which he would put in readiness for her. To this proposition Fannie finally yielded, but after the clergyman had arrived she thought that possibly this would not be the wisest course, and just as the knot was about to be tied she demurred. She then and there pledged her love to him, but instead of marrying him told him to go first to Australia, and after the arrangements for her comfort and happiness had been completed there, if he still loved her, to send for her and she would go to him. After a long voyage, he arrived safely. The climate proved congenial to his health. He saw that he would like the people, and that a home among them would be pleasant. He had not forgotten the promise that was made to her in Watertown, and when every thing came around to suit him he sent for the girl. She was faithful to her promise, and they were married at Sydney N. S. W., on Oct. 31.

Whose Fault is It?

A lady says: "We read a great deal about the extravagance of wives and of girls marrying without knowing how to cook or take care of a family. I should like to ask who is to blame for this state of affairs? Girls will be girls, and it will be useless to try to make women of them until they are old enough. If young men insist upon marrying girls before they are hardly out of school, before they are old enough to assume the responsibility of motherhood, they must abide by the consequences. The girls don't propose to the young men, [illegible]

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

—Live this day as if the last.

—First realize your coat, then cast it off.

—Avoid an angry man for awhile—a malicious man for ever.

—The imagination is of so delicate a texture that even words wound it.

—It is better to create than to be learned. Creating is the true essence of life.

—Ignorance is the curse of God; knowledge is the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

—Dark clouds roll up and obscure the sun, but we know that there is light above the clouds.

—A sound discretion is not so much indicated by never making a mistake as by never repeating it.

—God is on the side of virtue—for whoever dreads punishment suffers it; and whoever deserves it, dreads it.

—He that doeth a base thing in his zeal for a friend burns the golden thread that ties their hearts together.

—If I study any science it is that which treats of the knowledge of myself, and instructs me how to live and die well.

—Nothing is more ruinous for a man than when he is mighty enough in any part, to right himself without right.

—The object of all ambition should be to be happy at home. If we are not happy there, we cannot be happy elsewhere.

—A poet is thought to observe everything from a higher sphere, and to transport his spectators to this point of view.

—It is better to judge between strangers than between intimates; for by the first one is sure to gain a friend, and by the other an enemy.

—There is danger that a clergyman's mind may become the highway of sentiment, instead of the fruitful field of generous affections.

—The world is the book of women. Whatever knowledge they may possess is more commonly acquired by observation than by reading.

—What is the true test of character, unless it be its true development in the bustle and turmoil, the action and reaction of daily life.

—As I approve of the youth that has something of the old man in him, so I am no less pleased with an old man that has something of the youth.

—Virtue is reproached as design, and religion as only interest. The best of qualities must not pass without a but to allay their merit and abate their praises.

—Deep learning will make you acceptable to the learned; but it is only an easy and obliging behavior, and entertaining conversation, that will make you agreeable to all companies.

—Death to a good man is but passing through a dark entry, out of one little dusky room in his Father's house into another that is fair and large, lightsome and glorious, and divinely entertaining.

—Carlyle says that one cannot move a step without meeting a duty, and that the fact of mutual helplessness is proved by the very fact of one's existence. No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

—If a man excels in any direction in human life, it implies some exertion. And the scheme of Providence in creation is to take a clod and make a man of it; to inspire it; to re-inspire it; to educate it, to develope, to mould it and stimulate it. And all the world is at it. The heavens are a schoolmaster; the earth is a schoolmaster, the seasons are schoolmasters, a man's hunger is a schoolmaster.

—Conceit in the young means the possibility of immortal success or of ludicrous failure. If there were no conceit among the young, what would there be for the world but decent self seeking respectability? For the gain of the future, let us be a little more lenient to conceit than we are, remembering that if without it there need be no levelling of presumption in the dust, there could be no ascension of low born greatness to the heights.

That Puzzle.

A correspondent writes to the New York Herald: "The fifteen blocks used in the game of fifteen, when arranged with reference to each other, can be placed in 1,307,674,368,000 different positions. If sixty moves were made to a minute, for ten and a half hours a day and for 313 days a year, it would take a fraction over [illegible] years to place these blocks in all the positions they are susceptible of. If sixteen blocks were used, it would take, at the same rate of speed, over 1,[illegible] years to run them through their mutable positions. The earth in its course around the sun moves at the rate of [illegible] miles a minute, or about 579,[illegible] miles a year. It would take the earth more than 2,[illegible] years to travel as many miles as the fifteen blocks are susceptible of changes. If a salary of $1,000 per annum were paid it would cost nearly $[illegible] to run the fifteen blocks through the different positions. I am not an applicant for the job. I give the puzzle up. Life is too short to spend in trying to solve it. I am willing to listen to the "Pinafore," put up with the jaw of my mother-in-law, or assist in the management of any oyster supper in the basement of a church, and if the last kitten comes along cheerfully leave everything and go with him in search of the inventor of "game fifteen;" but excuse me, if you please, from trying to solve it.

Brotherly Love.

FIGHT IN A CHURCH.

PITTSBURG, Pa., March 29.—One of the most exciting church meetings ever held in Pittsburg took place this morning. The First Reformed Presbyterian Church, Oak Alley, held a congregational meeting. The rival factions attended. The Woodside faction proposed a compromise by electing one of the opposition as chairman, and appointing a teller from each side. It was rejected. The Woodside faction then proceeded to elect a chairman of their own and chose Samuel Barclay. He was about to take the chair when he was attacked by Mr. Black, the leader of the opposition. A fight ensued, which created great excitement and confusion. Mayor Liddell was summoned, and with the chief of police and a dozen officers cleared the room. They then allowed the leaders of each side to return in the hope of effecting a compromise. The crowd soon forced their way through the door, and a general fight ensued, in which the police used their clubs freely. The Mayor finally succeeded in clearing the room again, and declared that no meetings should be held. Arrangements are being made to have the matter settled by arbitration.

Art Exhibition in Kingston.

The Kingston News understands that arrangements have been completed for holding an art exhibition in the City Hall on the 15th of April next. Mr. O'Brien, President of the Canadian Academy, has promised to lend pictures, and Mr. D. Fowler has already sent his to Kingston. Several other gentlemen have promised contributions. Besides these there will be a large collection of drawings by pupils [illegible]

As Regards Eating and Sleeping.

The idea of getting up from the table hungry is unnatural and absurd and hurtful, quite as much so as getting up in the morning before your sleep is out, on the mischievous principle that "early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise." Early rising in civilized society always tends to shorten life. Early rising of itself never did any good. Many a farmer's boy has been made a invalid for life by being made to get up at daylight, before his sleep was out. Many a young girl has been stunted in her body and mind and constitution by being made to get up before the system has had its full rest. All who are growing, all who work hard, and all weakly persons, should not get up until they feel as if they would feel more comfortable to get up than to remain in bed; that is the only true measure of sufficiency of rest and sleep. Any one who gets up in the morning feeling as if he "would give anything in the world" to remain in bed a little longer, does violence to his own nature, and will always suffer from it—not immediately, it may be, but certainly in later years, by the cumulative ill effects of the most unwise practice. In any given case, the person who gets up in the morning before he is fully rested, will lack just that much of the energy requisite for the day's pursuit.

The Sultan's Personal Expenses.

Respecting the Sultan of Turkey, who may be said to keep Europe in a personal state of Turkish bath, some interesting statistics have been published. Abdul Hamid's favorite residence at Constantinople, the Yildiz Kiosk, is defended by thirty guns and garrisoned by 3,000 soldiers. Attached to the establishment are five "talkers," whose duty it is to scare away dull moments by pouring into his majesty's ears all the tittle-tattle, scandal and idle gossip of Constantinople. These talkers have under them a staff of sixty spies and sneaks, who day and night poke their noses into the city's holes and corners and creep up back stairs in search of spicy items for the royal ears. There are four sultanas and eighty women of harem, guarded by one hundred and twenty black eunuchs, who have special servants of their own and live well. There are ten maitres-d'hotel, three hundred cooks and two hundred waiters. Ten servants take care of his majesty's pipes, ten more a bit of carpet upon which he says his prayers, and ten more pass their lives in making coffee for him. Notwithstanding the external cry of poverty raised by poor Turkey, the sultan manages to spend to his household not less than $11,000,000 a year.

The Way to Health.

The only true way to health is that which common-sense dictates to man. Live within the bounds of reason. Eat moderately, drink temperately, sleep regularly, avoid excess in anything, and preserve a conscience "void of offence." Some men eat themselves to death, some drink themselves to death, some wear out their lives by indolence, and some by over-exertion, while not a few sink into the grave under the effects of vicious practices. All the medicines in creation are not worth a cent to a man who is constantly and habitually violating the laws of his own nature. All the medical science in the world cannot save him from a premature grave. With suicidal course of conduct he is planting the seeds of decay in his own constitution and accelerating the destruction of his own life.

An Ante-Bellum Poker Story Retold.

On one of the steamers that plowed the waters of the Mississippi in days gone by a quiet party was deeply immersed one evening in the mysteries of that somewhat uncertain game called poker. One of the party, a Colonel or Judge, or Major, history does not record which—in a fit of abstraction took the four aces from the pack with which the game was being played and laid them on his knee. The game progressed, and the Colonel almost "raised" his antagonist out of their boots. When the "draw" came, he threw away his legitimate five, called for one, and reached for the four aces on his knee. They were gone! Rising, he cried in tones of virtuous indignation: "Gentlemen, this thing has gone far enough. There's cheating going on around this table!"—Mobile (Ala.) Register.

A Land Where There are no Elopements.

I hope it is not believed in [illegible] land, for if a man marries a maid without her parent's consent the penalty is death. When a young man has formed an attachment to a female, the fashion is to appoint their friends to meet, to behold the young parties run a race together. The maid is allowed in starting the advantage of a third part of the race, so that it is impossible, except willing of herself, that she should be overtaken. If a maid overruns her suitor the matter is ended; he must never have her, it brings a penalty for the man to renew the motion for marriage. But, if the virgin has an affection for him, though at first she runs hard to try the truth of his love, she will (without Atlanta's golden balls to retard her speed) pretend to meet some casualty and voluntarily halt. Thus none are compelled to marry against their wishes, and this is the cause in this poor country that the married people are richer in their contentment than in other lands, where so many forced matches make feigned love and cause real unhappiness.

A Centenarian.

A representative of the Guide interviewed at Port Hope on Saturday morning an old lady of a hundred years, on her way from Mallorytown to Beaverton to spend her last days with a daughter. The old lady's name is Bovaire, and that of her daughter, who is fifty-one years of age, Mrs. Thos. McCullough. Mrs. Bovaire is the daughter of a Tuscarora chief, and her mother was a Scotchwoman. A party of immigrants camping up a stump in Connecticut, pulled in to shore to [illegible] the night. A roving band of Indians were in the neighborhood of the place of disembarking, and the chief attracted by the charms of the mother—then a girl—of the subject of the present notice, abducted her. He did about the best thing for himself, without knowing it, that he possibly could have done. Under her teaching he embraced Christianity, and subsequently [illegible] devoted himself to missionary work. Eleven children were born to them during their many happy years of wedded life. The venerable lady has been twice married, and is now a widow. She has had seven children, of whom the daughter who is now affectionately tending her is the only one living. She is a devout Christian, and member of the Methodist Church, and [illegible]

The Expulsion of the Jesuits from France.

PARIS, March 30.—Le Journal Officiel this morning publishes the decrees against the Jesuits and other unauthorized congregations. They are preceded by an explanatory report to the President of the Republic signed "Lepere, Minister of the Interior, Cazot, Minister of Justice." The decrees are explicit in language, and leave no loophole of escape for the societies in question. The clerical organizations threaten a legal resistance against the enforcement of the decrees. The regular clergy, formerly opposed to the Jesuits, take sides with them now, because it is said this conflict offers the last chance to the Church to resist with any degree of success the supremacy of the State. The revival of the enforcement of the old and almost forgotten laws against the Jesuits does not receive the unanimous approval of thoughtful people. Some are inclined to designate the spirit that prompts the decrees as contrary to the true principles of republicanism, and as antagonistic to the ideas of an enlightened and progressive age. They maintain that such repressive decrees evidence inherent weakness in the structure of the republican government, which is supposed to be founded upon broad and liberal principles, and would be better adapted for nations governed by an autocracy or the institutions of a by-gone and an intolerant age.

Couldn't Behave Herself.

A Saratoga correspondent overheard two young ladies talking and this is what they said:

"Well, I'm going home to-morrow."

"What for, pray?"

"Because I can't behave myself."

"Well, out with it, Jennie. What have you been doing?"

"Lots of things."

"Well, give us the first."

"You know Frank Kennedy, Nell?"

"That soft-simpering fellow that always tells you how 'charming' you look?"

"Exactly. This morning I saw him coming and made up my mind to take him down. I put my diamond brooch in the chair, pin upwards, and asked him to sit down."

"He sat, of course, and what then?"

"He jumped up and yelled, 'Oh my—' 'What's the trouble?' I asked. 'Nothing in particular, only I thought of an engagement at this very moment; you must excuse me.' And off he went; and would you believe it, Nell, the brooch was sticking to him."

"That was awful, Jennie," and the two girls giggled together for five minutes. Nell broke the spell by demanding "What next?"

"Why, you see, I was talking with that young spring of a clergyman, the Rev. Tom Parsons. We had nearly talked each other to death, when as luck would have it, he made some remark about mosquitoes. I was on my native heath at once and began to tell him my experience at Rockaway. 'Did they bite very hard?' inquired the Rev. Thomas. 'I wish Mr. Parson,' said I, 'you could have seen my legs and judge for yourself.'"

"That was a horrid speech, Jennie. How could you say such a thing?"

"Why, Nell, it popped out before I knew it."

"And what did Mr. Parson say?"

"He blushed clean to the eyes, and I ran away."

Things to Remember.

That fish may be scaled much easier by dipping in boiling water about a minute.

That fish may as well be scaled if desired before packing down in salt, though in that case do not scald them.

Salt fish are quickest and best freshened by soaking in sour milk.

That milk which is turned or changed may be sweetened and rendered fit for use again by stirring in a little soda.

That salt will curdle new milk; hence, in preparing milk porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared.

That fresh meat after beginning to sour, will sweeten if placed out of doors in the cool over night.

That clear boiling water will remove tea stains and many fruit stains. Pour the water through the stain and thus prevent its spreading over the fabric.

That ripe tomatoes will remove ink and other stains from white cloth; also from the hands.

That a teaspoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid the whitening process.

That boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm, or a little salt, or both, or a little gum arabic dissolved.

That beeswax and salt will make your rusty flat irons as clean as glass. Tie a lump of wax in a rag and keep for that purpose. When the irons are hot, rub them first with a wax rag, and then scour with a paper or cloth sprinkled with salt.

That blue ointment and kerosene mixed in equal proportions, and applied to bedsteads, is an unfailing bed-bug remedy, and that a coat of whitewash is ditto for the wall of a log house.

That kerosene will soften boots or shoes which have been hardened by water and render them as pliable as new.

That kerosene will make tin kettles bright as new. Saturate a woolen rag and rub with it. It will also remove stains from and clean varnished furniture.

That cold rain water and soda will remove machine grease from washable fabrics.

Every one of these receipts is unfailing. Cut out this slip and place it in a book for reference.

Indian Troubles in Dakota.

As many Canadians seem to fancy Dakota as a desirable place of settlement it may be interesting to such to know that trouble is threatened between the white settlers upon the Upper James River, Dakota, and a Sioux band under chief "Drifting Goose." A story is told of [illegible]

Lord Brackenbury.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of "Barbara's History," "Debenham's Vow," etc.

CHAPTER [illegible].

WHAT MR. PROUTING SAW THROUGH THE KEY-HOLE.

At about nine o'clock in the evening—the evening of the day [illegible] Lord Brackenbury made his great [illegible]—two men, the one coming down, [illegible] going up, met just below the first [illegible] the main staircase at the Hotel [illegible]. The one coming down was [illegible] Costa's head clerk. The one going up was he who had valued the diamonds.

The workman stood aside, and touched his hat meekly. The head clerk, sleek and self-important, passed him with a condescending "Buona sera!" then looked back to see what he would do on reaching the landing.

He did just what Signor Giovanni [illegible] posted. Instead of attacking the [illegible] flight, he turned to the left, and knocked at the first door in the corridor. It was opened by a tall, gentlemanly-looking man with bushy light whiskers, a white cravat, and a gold chain festooned across his waistcoat.

Antonio pulled off his hat, and [illegible] deferentially for "Mi-lord Braschi." He never dreamed that this distinguished-looking person was Mi-lord Braschi's valet.

"Mi-lord Braschi!" echoed the gentleman with the whiskers, looking down upon him with lofty [illegible]. "Well, I don't know. Is your [illegible]

Understanding no E[illegible] [illegible] his own name, the workman [illegible] affirmatively, and being told to "come in," followed mi-lord's valet through a half-lighted drawing-room, where the dessert was yet standing [illegible] table, and to a [illegible]

[illegible] person. "Come in, Antonio," he said, in his finest Italian. "You come early, but your work is ready for you."

It was a desert of a room, full of mirrors and marble-topped consoles and gilded furniture; and it was lit in the usual melancholy way by two or three pairs of yellow wax lights placed here and there on side tables. A moderator lamp [illegible] centre table cast, however, a [illegible] space of light on the objects [illegible] within its radius, these [illegible] a legal looking document [illegible] brass-bound coffer which Antonio [illegible] at the bankers'.

"Is there anything you will be likely to want?" asked Lord Brackenbury.

The workman, with a quick glance round the room, suggested, "More light;" so Lord Brackenbury ordered another lamp.

"After which, Prouting," he added, "I shall want nothing more to-night. If any one asks for me, I am engaged, and [illegible] not be interrupted."

Respectfully silent, Mr. Prouting withdrew, but re-appearing presently with the lamp, requested to know at what hour my lord would take tea. My lord, however, repeated that he needed nothing more. Whereupon Mr. Prouting, ingeniously lingering, straightened the table cloth, replaced the pens in the inkstand, and adjusted the lamps. Antonio meanwhile had taken from his pocket, and opened upon the table, a shabby leathern case full of steel implements of various sizes. These implements, which looked like instruments of torture, awakened such a lively curiosity in Mr. Prouting's soul that he found it necessary to regulate the lamps again.

"That will do, Prouting," said Lord Brackenbury, impatiently. "I shall not want you again."

Mr. Prouting [illegible] knowing that [illegible] sufficient reason [illegible] presently. Scarcely had he closed the door, however, when the key grated in the lock.

Being a gentleman of keen susceptibilities, Mr. Prouting felt this blow acutely—so severely that he was obliged to have recourse to a glass of his lord's Madeira. Was ever such a monstrous indignity? With what object was he locked out? What did that brass-bound box contain? Who was Antonio? What was his trade? What was he going to do with those torture-looking tools? What, in short, was the mystery?

Now the one thing that Mr. Prouting loathed was a mystery. A sealed letter, a conversation in a foreign tongue, a locked door, were his favorite aversions. Was it not his chartered right to hear everything, to see everything, to know my lord's business at least as well as my lord knew it himself, if not better? Words are weak to express Mr. Prouting's disgust when he found himself locked out on the present occasion.

But a truly great soul is not easily daunted; and the greatness of Mr. Prouting's soul led him, after a few minutes' consideration, to squat down upon his heels before the door of the saloon, and apply his eye to the key-hole. For not only had experience taught him that a turned key leaves a sure field for observation, but foresight and the natural bent of an inquiring mind had led him to place the centre table of the saloon and the chair that his master usually occupied well within range of the key-hole. So to arrange the furniture on arriving at a fresh hotel was Mr. Prouting's invariable custom; and in some of his former places [illegible] had been the means of procuring him [illegible] legitimate entertainment. Not so, however, during the eighteen months that he had served his present master. In Lord Brackenbury's simple and solitary way of life there was, in fact, nothing to [illegible]. At home, he hunted, shot, and [illegible] himself less than any of his neighbours; went very little into society; hated London; spent his evenings for the most part in his library; and was [illegible] given to long walks with no other company than his dog, his book, or his gun. Abroad, he had drifted from Paris to Geneva, from Geneva to Nice, from Nice to Genoa, in just the same humdrum fashion. He made no acquaintances, avoided the people he knew, and as soon as he found himself within reach of the coast, instead of his usual [illegible] rambles, [illegible] his time drifting about in an open boat. He did not even [illegible] his money freely. Not that he was either poor or stingy, but apparently because he had too little interest in the things that travellers usually want. A more unbearable and a more unprofitable master, from Mr. Prouting's point of view, it would have been difficult to find betwixt the Land's End and Berwick-upon-Tweed. He would wear the same old hunting coat for [illegible] years, and was [illegible]

SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1880.

By the provisions of the amendments to the public school law, passed at the last session of the Ontario Legislature, it is made compulsory on municipal assessors to include in their duties a complete census of the children of school age residing in their respective municipalities. This is a simplification of matters that must meet with approval, and it is no small recommendation that it will lessen expense, a most desirable result, whether in municipal or general governments.

A few days ago a friend showed us an ancient American newspaper, published more than a [illegible] years ago, of the English news [illegible] was of the date of January 1st. The very latest date of the 9th of the previous October. Now, through the ocean cables, we learn of an important event transpiring in the old world before it happens, if we do not consider the difference of longitude. But such news is very dear, and not satisfied with such wonderful improvements, the world must needs go a step further, and get news cheaply as well [illegible] quickly. With the object of cheapening ocean cable rates, a company has been organized in New York, with a capital of four millions, half of which is subscribed by English capitalists, to lay down at once another ocean cable. The rate of charges will be eighteen cents, as against seventy-five, the present rate.

The everlasting Yankee is never wearied of exalting the name of the founder of the republic, yet although it is several years since that great and good man passed away, there is no monument erected to his memory in the focus of the national glory, the city that bears his name. About the year 1810 a subscription to a monument fund was started, and so liberally did American patriotism respond that in ten years the munificent sum of $8,000, as a contingent of the required sum of $150,000, was secured. And as no more money could be raised by subscription, that sum was put out at interest and has increased to $100,000, and by the time the next centennary of the union rolls round there will be enough money to build a monument to the father of his country, unless, in the meanwhile, some astute treasurer of the fund suddenly emigrates to Canada or Mexico.

If the National Policy did not result in the framing of a tariff retaliatory on the Americans, it has given rise to one that makes them wince at least. The Boston, Baltimore and Buffalo boards of Trade, and the corn exchange of Baltimore have passed resolutions advocating a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and the committee of House of Representatives on foreign affairs, heard, a few days ago, arguments in favor of the project, among which one was that the Canadian tariff is practically prohibitory of the importation of many articles produced in the United States. It will be seen that, little and insignificant as Canada seems to the United States, the trade of the former is of some importance to Uncle Sam.

The new banking Act which Sir Leonard Tilley is about to introduce into Parliament, may be briefly summarized. It provides for a note circulation secured by the government with a view to yield the most money to the government. To effect this, the government will issue all notes under fives—ones, twos and fours, and keep for their redemption, a certain amount of specie. The banks will issue only fives or multiples of five, giving as security for payment, a deposit with the government of four per cent. interest-bearing bonds. The established banks will have the privilege, till 1891, of issuing their own fives and multiples of five, without depositing security with the government, but in case of insolvency of a bank, the notes become a preferential charge on its assets. In addition, the banks will hold forty per cent. of their cash reserve in Dominion notes. The eventual result of the act, it is said, will be to make, of all the circulation the country requires, a loan of exactly that amount to the government. All the notes of the same denomination, issued by the banks under the new act, will be printed from the same plate, with the exception of the name of the bank issuing them, which will be filled in. They will bear the government guarantee and be legal tender for debts. It is anticipated that banking corporations will offer little opposition to the act.

THE BRITISH ELECTIONS.

The result of the elections in Great Britain, so far as they have taken place, have surprised both the Beaconsfield and Gladstone party; and not them alone, but Europe and America. Of the 650 members to be elected, so far there have been returned 272 liberals, 145 conservatives and thirty-three home-rulers. Thus it will be seen that the liberal ministry which will be formed, has now a clear majority of 126, not counting the home-rulers, who will mostly be likely to give the government a divided, and not at all reliable support, and without whose support the liberal party must rejoice that they can form a powerful government. If the government should win half of the 179 seats yet to be contested, and with popular tide so strongly set against them they are not likely to do so, the opposition would still have a majority of thirty-six. The liberals have made a net gain of [illegible] Lord Beaconsfield's resignation, it is stated that he will advise Her Majesty to call on Gladstone to form a ministry, and it seems she could not do otherwise. No minister could lead the House of Commons with the "People's William," an irresponsible dictator, behind him. It is probable that he will become the head of the new government, and with the understanding that he will, in a year or two, retire and be succeeded by Lord Granville, with his laurels fresh with the breath of victory, while his adversary, who went up in the political sky with the pyrotechnic brilliance of a rocket, has come down very like the stick.

CORRESPONDENCE.

National Currency.

NO. X.

To the Editor of The Beaver.

Dear Sir,—The tug of war seems coming! Mr. A. W. Wright, Secretary of the "Financial Reform League," has challenged the Hon. George Brown to a platform discussion of the National Currency question. The challenge was given in consequence of the appearance in the Globe of the following editorial:—

"The Finance Minister's resolutions respecting the Currency have not yet been made public, but there is from present indications every reason to believe that the Government are prepared to go quite as far with respect to the Currency as they have already done with regard to the fiscal question. The danger to the country from the unsettling nature of these new departures is very great, and it is a question whether, in view of the proposed action of the Government, and the encouragement thereby afforded to the advocates of irredeemable paper money, the time has not come for meeting these people on their own platform. * * * As there is always a tendency to regard unanswered arguments as unanswerable, it is quite possible that some mischief may be done by unopposed agitators, which could easily have been prevented by the intelligent presentation of the other side."

Now, although everybody but those who accept the Globe as their special revelation, was well aware that the presentation the Globe has been making of "the other side" of the Currency question was anything but an "intelligent presentation," we were hardly prepared for so frank an avowal from the Globe itself. Those "unopposed agitators" may do great "mischief," all of which "could easily have been prevented by the intelligent presentation of the other side!" True it is hard to make an intelligent presentation of error; and, as before remarked, it requires more ability to defend falsehood than truth; yet the Globe might at least ere this have made a serious attempt to confute the arguments of its opponents instead of dealing exclusively in epithets and ridicule. It is well, however, that this tardy follower, not moulder, of public opinion has now come to see the necessity of an "intelligent presentation," and of "meeting these people on their own platform." This is exactly what these N. C. people have been courting all along, for if their doctrines will not bear discussion on the platform or intelligent examination in the press, let them go down.

Impressed with this belief Mr. Wright, the Secretary of the F. R. L., on seeing that the Globe was at last in favor of platform discussion and "intelligent presentation," forthwith, by the concurrence of the other officers of the League, sent the Hon. George Brown a courteous invitation or challenge to meet him on the platform in discussion of the merits of the "rag baby." The following is the gist of the challenge as appears in the papers, and which was sent to the Globe:—

"I beg most respectfully to offer to meet the managing director of the Globe Printing and Publishing Co. (Hon. George Brown) at an early date, which may be convenient to him, in St. Lawrence Hall, Toronto, for the purpose of debating the currency question. Should Mr. Brown feel that he is unprepared for a discussion such as is proposed, this offer may be considered as a challenge to any advocate of hard money Mr. Brown may suggest."

(Signed) A. W. Wright.

Mr. Brown has not yet I believe accepted this challenge either personally or by proxy, and it remains to be seen whether or no hard money men have confidence in their position, for if they have they need not fear discussion. The truth can never suffer by any amount of discussion and investigation.

I notice that Grip has improved this most auspicious occasion by giving, last week, an admirable cartoon, in which the "rag baby" (now lusty and well grown,) with Wright, Buchanan and Wallace at his back, stands, with his documents in his hand and the "chip" on his shoulder, boldly and defiantly confronting Mr. Brown and daring him to knock the "chip" off!

I may be pardoned for also improving the occasion of Grip's cartoon thus:—

The time has come, says the Globe, "these people" to meet
"Upon their own platform" to ensure their defeat;
For "arguments unanswered" will pass for the truth,
Hence, these "unopposed agitators" must be met, forsooth.

The game "baby" at once the gauntlet throws down,
And defiantly offers to fight George Brown,—
And Grip shows, past a doubt, that the brave little' man,
Will fight the "big thunderer" for better or for "wuss."

Last week in his cutey side-splitting cartoon,
He's painted the baby's no puny poltroon
With Buchanan and Wallace and Wright to his back,
Of the brilliant brave O. lord fam the whole pack.

Another Brutal Murder

A YOUNG WOMAN THE VICTIM.

Montreal, April 2.—A terrible affair is telegraphed from Arthabaskaville to-day from Bulstrode, a village about eleven miles from Arthabaskaville, a municipal village near Arthabaska, on the Grand Trunk Railway. It appears that on Tuesday morning a young girl named Odelie Denis left her father's house to go to the residence of a neighbor named Lecharme, about 40 acres distant from her own house. She carried with her wool and knitting-needles, with which to pass her time knitting. She did not return in the afternoon, and the family becoming alarmed made enquiry from the Lecharme farm, but no one had seen the young woman pass. The alarm was given, and a search instituted by the neighbors, who failed to find any trace of her that night. Next day her body was found in a well, head downwards, and upon examination it proved that she had been the victim of a horrible outrage before her murder. Her face was covered with blood, and bore the marks of many gaping wounds, while her hands were cut, and upon her neck and chin were also several knife wounds. Her disordered dress also gave evidence of a desperate resistance, and altogether the spectacle was a horrifying one to look upon. The news spread through the village with the rapidity of wild fire, and every one was on the alert to discover the murderer. Notwithstanding their vigilance no trace has been found. Suspicion pointed very strongly to a [illegible] in the neighborhood, who had his coat torn and some marks of blood upon his face and hands, which he explained by saying that he had been chopping wood. The [illegible] of which things are done in these French villages, however, is a guarantee that a crime of this kind, and the [illegible] may never be heard of.

Active measures are being taken to discover the parties who set fire to the churches, but no arrests have been made.
—A thrilling event happened recently on the Western railway in France. A passenger train had just left the station of [illegible], when the door of a third class carriage flew open, and a child of four years, who was leaning against it, fell out on to the line. The mother shrieked in despair and tried to jump out after her offspring, but was prevented by the other passengers, who had to hold her down. After some time shouting and signalling, the attention of the guard was attracted and the train stopped. The poor woman alighted, and, followed by the guard, ran in search of her child, whom she expected to find dead, but she found the poor little thing unhurt standing crying on an embankment.
—It is astonishing how little it takes to kill people, especially if old and feeble. A heavy fog, excessive heat, excessive cold, grief or joy touches the delicately poised balance of life and it snaps. A famous German woman that is the one was famous among those who knew appeared by hours, recently met a young man in Wimbledon, who insisted that he had acquaintance with her. She haughtily repelled him and, in spite of his remarks said she hadn't the honor. "I am the Prince of Wales," said the young man. The countess fainted, and, mortified at this exhibition of her want of tact and of her forgetfulness, died in four days. And yet nothing is said to show that it really was the Prince of Wales and not some audacious adventurer.
—Anthony Golding, a farmer living in the 5th concession of Tyendinaga, has laid information against George Litton, a neighbor charging him with attempted murder. The complainant states that on Tuesday morning, when at work in the woods on his farm, a bullet whistled close by his head, striking a stump. He proceeded to where the report came from and found Litton lying behind a stump. The latter rose and fired a shot from a revolver at Golding and struck him with his clubbed gun breaking the stock. They closed, and Litton got the advantage, but a nine-year-old son of Golding turned the scale in favor of his father, who struck his antagonist, rendering him partially insensible, and took his gun and revolver and went home to get his wounds, which are quite serious, dressed. The affair was the result of an old feud. Litton has not yet been arrested.
—Says the London World: —One of the most sensational actions for breach of promise of marriage that ever startled society will shortly come before the courts. The defendant is a Young Guardsman, the head of a rich county family, who, after a two years' engagement, allowed the preparations for his marriage to go so far that besides insisting on the selection of his fiancée's wedding dress he ordered the wedding cards, purchased the ring and travelling trunks with his own initials on those of the lady, arranged with coach-maker for the alteration of the lady's brougham to his own as her own carriage, invited a county visit to come to London to marry him, and last, not least, went over the [illegible] to his affianced wife the night before he left town to visit his family, only four days before the intended ceremony at St. George's, Hanover Square. Since the night in question the lady has never set eyes on the gentleman.
—There was an uproar in a Philadelphia theatre on Monday. A caged lion from a menagerie had been introduced on the stage with marked success. The curtain had gone down, and the stage was crowded with actors and actresses. [illegible]

HARNESS OF ALL KINDS

CHEAPER THAN EVER!

The Puzzle is, how the subscriber continues to sell his celebrated Double and Single sets of Harness at old prices, in the face of the N. P. tariff now imposed.

The only solution to this is, he is content with a small profit on his work, and prefers the nimble sixpence to the slow shilling, and believes in sharing his profits with his customers, to all of whom he returns his sincere thanks for the patronage heretofore extended to him since his commencement in business.

He has removed his shop and salesroom to the McKenty Block, where he hopes to receive a call from all his old friends and from all those desirous of purchasing the most accessible harness at rock-bottom prices.

Having spent many years in the manufacture of harness, he believes himself to be a competent judge of all material used in his business, and customers purchasing from him may rely on getting a thoroughly first-class article, as he will not sell anything but the very choicest stock in his work.

A large lot of Plain and Fancy Harness always on hand to select from, and orders received for Single or Double Sets will be promptly attended to and satisfaction guaranteed in every instance.

Carriages and Cutters trimmed in the very latest style of the art, and no exorbitant prices asked. Mending of all kinds done with neatness and despatch.

Shop and salesroom one door west of McKenty's store in McKenty's block.

Soliciting a call whenever you want anything in my line, I remain your obd't servant.

Sheriff's Office, Napanee, April 6th, A.D. 1880.

T. G. DAVIS' COLUMN.

I wish to advise all whom it may concern, that I represent the following strong stock Cos., with an aggregate capital of $[illegible]: Fire, life, accident and Marine, and as I make insurance a specialty, I am in a better position to cater to the public wants, than those who do not. I ask no premium notes for those times the amount of the premium, but insure on the cash system. Will accept first-class dwelling risks and contents at the. per $100 for three years, and where a responsible man needs 30 days to pay premium, can accommodate him, and no money asked before policy is delivered. Those who are not consult your own interest and insure at once? Don't delay; an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Any party wishing to consult me can drop me a postal card, call at the Campbell House or at the office of [illegible], Napanee, where I will be happy to meet them and save their money.

For fire insurance don't fail to insure with T. G. Davis.

For life insurance don't give your application without seeing T. G. Davis.

For accident insurance be given you the cheapest rates.

For marine insurance he represents No. 1 Co.

To parties who will secure applications for life or accident a good commission will be paid.

The only for horses the Liniment in yellow wrappers. Sold by all druggists. Trial bottles 25 cents.

From a Prominent Veterinary Surgeon.

Mr. Wm. M. Giles:—Dear Sir,—I have practised extensively in Europe and America, and your liniment Iodide Ammonia surpasses anything I ever used for splints, strains, lameness in the limbs or shoulders, weakness across the kidneys, wind galls and hard bony swellings on the joints. It is very marvellous. Yours, very truly,

Ralph Ogle, Veterinary Surgeon, 120 West 25th St., N.Y.

I avail myself of the opportunity of recording my gratitude for the great and wonderful results produced by Giles Liniment Iodide Ammonia in removing a ringbone from a valuable horse without blistering or removing the hair.

George S. Tryon, [illegible] West [illegible] St., N.Y.

I have used Giles Liniment of Iodide Ammonia from its first introduction in the Dominion. It performs wonders in my stables, where veterinary surgeons have failed. It has cured lameness and removed bunches.

J. T. Morris, Lagauchetiere St., Montreal.

Write to Dr. Giles, 120 West Broadway, N.Y., who will cure without charge.

back, and his little magnifying-glass; from his waistcoat pocket, selected a delicate little pair of steel nippers from among his tools, screwed the glass into his right eye, and proceeded rapidly to bend and cut asunder the silver setting which held the stones together.

Mr. Pronting watched them drop out upon the table, saw Lord Brackenbury count them, and Antonio divide them into three little heaps, sorting them apparently according to their size. This done, another and another jewel was subjected to the same process, the workman performing his task with surprising dexterity, and the precious little heaps becoming momentarily larger. By-and-by bracelets, tiara, and aigrette having been broken up in succession, Antonio began upon a handful of smaller objects.

"Does the signore wish this old ring taken to pieces?" he asked. "The stones are small and will be worth very little."

It was an old-fashioned portrait ring, shield-shaped, set round with a single row of small brilliants, and surmounted by a crown.

Lord Brackenbury put it on his finger, drew the lamp nearer, and recognizing the Spanish gift of which Signor Moro had told him, examined it with some interest.

"You are right," he said. "It is a curious old ring; but the diamonds are valueless. I will keep it as it is."

Mr. Pronting was no Italian scholar; but he noted the looks and gestures, and made a shrewd guess at their meaning.

Lord Brackenbury meanwhile kept the ring upon his finger, and Antonio went on with his work. Pausing every now and then, he inquired, apparently, whether certain of the smaller jewels should be spared or not, and when answered, broke them up. So by degrees the glittering pile diminished, the three little heaps increased, and the table became strewn with scraps of jagged silver.

Fast as he worked, it was long past midnight when Antonio sorted the last diamonds. Seeing him in the act of replacing his tools in their case, and Lord Brackenbury taking out his purse, Mr. Pronting withdrew, closing the door noiselessly behind him, and returning up stairs to the next landing. There he waited, secure against observation, and by the dim light of the oil-lamp which glimmered after midnight in the corridor, saw Antonio presently go down into the hall, and with a muttered "Buona notte" to the night porter, pass out into the street.

About ten minutes later, Mr. Pronting, armed with a tray containing lemons, sugar, a tumbler, and a water carafe, walked boldly into the saloon, and surprised Lord Brackenbury in the act of making up his diamonds into a number of small packets, one of which he was at that moment folding and sealing.

He looked up impatiently.

"I said I would not want you again to-night," he said, frowning.

"Beg pardon, my lord, but meeting Mr. Antonio just now in the hall, I concluded your lordship was not gone to bed, and thought you would like your lemonade, as usual."

Mr. Pronting speaking and moving with even more than his accustomed deliberation, took note of everything upon the table. Nothing escaped him—neither the sealed packets, nor the piles of diamonds, nor the belt of chamois leather which lay beside them, and in which his master, when travelling, was wont to carry money and bills of exchange. It needed no preternatural sagacity to divine at once that Lord Brackenbury was preparing to stock the belt with diamonds, and to carry his treasure upon his person. Mr. Pronting observed also that the legal-looking document was gone, and that the brass-bound coffer had been removed to one of the side tables.

Lord Brackenbury looked annoyed.

"Having brought the tray you may leave it," he said, "but remember in future that I want nothing I have not ordered."

"Very good, my lord."

"And that when I say I shall not require you again, I desire not to be interrupted."

Mr. Pronting repeated his "Very good, my lord," and moved sedately toward the door, then paused and added,

"Your lordship desired me to inquire about a travelling carriage."

"Yes, have you heard of one?"

"There were two here to-day, my lord—a light one-horse trap from some place inland, with a single gentleman, and a good return calèche from Nice with a pair of greys."

"Would the last suit me?"

"Suit you exactly, I should say, my lord—good springs, and not too heavy for the hills. I spoke to the driver. He belongs to the town, and would be willing to leave his horses here and take posters, if your lordship preferred them."

"And his price?"

"From here to Pisa, my lord, by way of the coast, thirty napoleons with his own horses; but if with post-horses, your lordship will have to make a special arrangement."

"Say that I will see him and his carriage to-morrow morning at ten."

"Very good, my lord."

"Have you inquired about the state of the roads?"

"Yes, my lord. There is still snow on the high ground somewhere between here and Spezia, but otherwise, the roads are in good order."

"And safe, of course?"

"Safe as the streets of London, according to all accounts, my lord. No one travels with an escort, in these parts, but the government courier."

"Enough. I shall not want you again to-night."

Mr. Pronting, with his hand upon the door, murmured his customary "Very good, my lord."

"And look here, Pronting—if I had reason to suppose that you ever talked amongst the servants and couriers down yonder about anything you hear—or see—in my rooms," said Lord Brackenbury, with a hesitating glance at the diamonds, "I would dismiss you from my service at a minute's notice."

Mr. Pronting stared at the three precious piles with all his might, and coughed significantly.

"My discretion, my lord, has never been called in question," he replied, with an air of injured dignity.

"So much the better. You can go."

Mr. Pronting made as if he was about to speak, lingered for a moment, then reluctantly withdrew.

Again Lord Brackenbury turned the key upon his faithful valet, again that faithful valet ostentatiously opened and shut the dining-room and anteroom doors, came noiselessly back, and applied his eye to the keyhole as before.

But the main action of the drama was over, and what now followed was scarcely worth the trouble of observing. He saw Lord Brackenbury dispose of the rest of the diamonds in some eight or ten little packets, seal each packet with his signet, stow them whole away in the pockets of his travelling belt, then fetch his dispatch box and settle down, apparently, to a night of hard writing. For more than half an hour Mr. Pronting watched the travelling of his pen. At first he seemed to be copying the contents of certain papers, which he took up one by one [illegible] the [illegible] then took out a packet of letters—small [illegible], dipped into others, and set to work, apparently, to answer them. Except that he paused now and then to refer back, or to lean his cheek upon his hand and think, he wrote on incessantly.

At last even Mr. Pronting's curiosity tired. Cramped and almost crippled, he straightened himself with difficulty, and crept away to bed.

CHAPTER IV.

A FESTA DAY ON THE RIVIERA.

Lord Brackenbury, although he had spoken of beginning his southward journey on the morrow, did not start, after all, till the morning of the second day following his great purchase. In the meanwhile he inspected the calèche, made terms with the driver, and was out, probably on the water, during the greater part of the intervening day. He came back to his hotel, at all events, late and tired, on that Monday evening, and went to bed early, giving orders for the carriage to be at the door by nine.

By nine, therefore, Alessandro Cirpi, licensed vetturino No. 47, native and citizen of Genoa, commonly known as "Sandro Quaranta-Sette," brought his calèche round with a mighty clatter, and drew up at the door of the Hotel Feder.

There was not, at the time of which I am writing, a more popular vetturino on the road than Sandro Quaranta-Sette, or a vehicle more steadily in request than the "leathern conveniency" which now awaited my Lord Brackenbury's pleasure. Roomy but not unwieldily, provided with numberless straps, pockets, and hiding places, hung light and high, lined with spotless dimity, and yellow outside as an orange, this irreproachable family conveyance was generally to be seen at the heels of a pair of sturdy greys driven by Sandro himself. Lord Brackenbury, however, preferred posting, so the yellow calèche appeared on the present occasion behind four gaunt roadsters and two shabby postilions, while Sandro, with a rose behind his ear and a cigarette in his mouth, sat in idle dignity upon the box.

The usual knot of street urchins, porters and miscellaneous idlers gathered at once about the carriage door, a couple of porters in white jackets came hurrying out with sundry portmanteaus and hat-boxes, Mr. Pronting appeared on the steps with his master's dressing case and railway rug, and a lively cross fire of "chaff" in the purest Genoese style was immediately opened between the bystanders on the pavement and the porters who were strapping the luggage to the roof.

As Mr. Pronting descended the steps with his wonted dignity, half a dozen brown hands were thrust forward to open the carriage door and relieve him of his burden. The owners of the hands took him for their lord; and he accepted the compliment as his due. The same tribute had been paid many a time before to the glitter of his gold chain and the magnitude of his whiskers, and it in a manner consoled Mr. Pronting for the despotism of circumstances and the irony of fate.

Lord Brackenbury came out a minute or two later followed by the bowing landlord and the obsequious head waiter, whereupon Mr. Pronting lost in his turn to hold the door, and touch his hat, and finally to clamber into the rumble, which feat he performed amid a circle of grinning faces and a shower of unintelligible banter.

And now, with an accelerating cracking of whips and a tremendous shower of rattling off at a gallant pace, the yellow calèche rumbled away from the door of the Hotel Feder. But it is not easy to go far at a gallant pace in the picturesque city of Genoa, and the little crowd was scarcely left out of sight before the postilions turned their horses' heads toward a labyrinth of steep and narrow streets, up which it was only possible to drag the carriage at a walk—streets such as the traveller sees nowhere save in Italy in old towns by the sea; streets where the houses seem to have grown out of the rocks, and to be a part of them, and the rugged basement stones are green with slime, and the old wrought-iron balconies are eaten through with rust, and the causeway underfoot, worn by the traffic of centuries, is furrowed like the restless waters of the bay; streets where the sky overhead is a strip of burning blue seen between mouldering cornices and jutting eaves where swallows build, and the wandering [illegible] and the sea-gull [illegible] when storms sweep up from the sea.

It would seem at first sight scarcely to sail a ship up one of these narrow streets as to get any four-wheeled and four-horsed vehicle over such paving-stones in some instances, but they are so to speak, as a rule, than the narrower and easier thoroughfares; and the yellow calèche, lumbering laboriously up and through a succession of such streets barely wide enough for two people abreast, encountered a downward stream of foot passengers and trucks, market carts, and hired vehicles of every description.

For it was high holiday in Genoa—the feast of some popular saint in whose honour the picturesque old city was all astir this bright changeable morning. A busy, noisy, joyous day! In the air, clash and clang of bells; in the harbor, a flutter of many-colored flags, on the church doors, flaunting draperies of crimson and yellow; in the street, crowds of women in white veils, priests, mendicant friars, weather beaten sailors with rings in their ears, and fishermen with gay sashes wound about their waists and red caps on their heads; in every dark shop window and under every gloomy basement arch, piles of candy stuffs and pyramids of green and brown pottery; before every little street-corner Madonna, a flickering oil-lamp and a handful of flowers in a cheap vase; and in every open space, stalls for the sale of fruit, flowers, vegetables, rosaries, wax tapers, toys, trinkets, ballads, fried fish, roasted chestnuts, and the like. It was real Genoa weather, too, wild and variable, bursts of brilliant sunshine alternating with sudden gusts of rain—rain storms converting the streets into shifting parterres of huge umbrellas, red, blue, green, and party-colored, while the pavement underfoot became a network of miniature water courses rushing turbulently downward to the level of the quays.

Upon Lord Brackenbury, buried moodily in a corner of the calèche, upon Mr. Pronting, mewling at Fortune in the rumble, these picturesque sights and scenes were thrown away. Not so, however, upon Sandro Quaranta-Sette, who saw everything, enjoyed everything, pulled off his hat to the priest, flung a copper to the blind cripple at the crossing, and had a nod and a laugh for everyone that passed—for his fellow vetturini as well as for their carriage-loads of [illegible] peasant women and their [illegible] children; for the [illegible] such as [illegible] and roast chestnuts; for the pedlar with his tray of knives, rosaries, [illegible], and pocket-mirrors; for the vendors of [illegible] and mineral-[illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] for the [illegible] of their [illegible]; for the shabby custom house officials at the city gate; and even for the sentries in their sentry boxes at the head of the drawbridge, as the carriage passes the line of fortifications and the road, still ascending, opened out in the direction of the sea.

And now, for some miles of the way, they continued to [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] great [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], Genoa, in jacket and breeches of [illegible] great [illegible]; or, [illegible] full of laughing girls, [illegible] little-day with a wonderful head-gear, all brass ornaments, filigree, and scarlet tassels. Farther still, as the distance became greater and the day wore on, this tide of wayfarers gradually ceased. Meanwhile from every fishing village nestled hundreds of feet below on the brink of the blue sea there rose a faint echo of church bells; and in one little hamlet, where the wayside church was all too small for the numbers who had come to worship within its walls, there knelt outside in the dust of the road and the glare of noon a silent crowd to whom the words of the priest were inaudible, but for whom there were prayer and thanksgiving enough in the chanting of the acolytes and the tinkling of the bell.

Shortly after mid-day, having changed horses twice since leaving Genoa, Sandro Quaranta-Sette put up for an hour at a quaint little town, fantastically built, roof below roof, in a ravine opening down so steeply to the beach that it looked as if a cataract of houses had tumbled over the cliff two or three hundred years ago, and taken root among the ledges of the rocks. A dizzy road, carved out zigzags, led down to this little town, and there were clusters of fan palms on the height above, and rows of black fishing boats drawn up on the sand below, and on the verge of a jutting promontory some mile or two farther along the shore a wide fronted, many windowed convent surrounded by cypresses.

Here, too, it was all festa to-day—streets and market-place crowded with idlers; men playing at morra, women gossiping, bells ringing, church standing open, and a lingering perfume of incense on the air. There was but one inn in the place—a rambling old house, with kitchen and stabling on the ground-floor, and a big dirty dining room up stairs, full of country folk eating, drinking, smoking, and making merry. Here Mr. Pronting, not without sundry painful misgivings as to the inferiority of his surroundings sat down with Sandro Quaranta-Sette to a sort of rustic table d'hôte dinner, while Lord Brackenbury strolled into the church to see a certain miracle-working picture of the Madonna, which was the glory and pride of the place.

It had been washed ashore one night during a great storm about eight years ago, said the old sacristan, who was trimming the lamps for the vesper service, "since when, with the blessing of Our Lady and all the saints, it had wrought many famous cures."

Lord Brackenbury looked, listened, and gravely smiled.

Like the generality of miracle working pictures, it was a miserable daub.

"Does it cure all diseases alike, or is it good for only certain ailments?" he asked.

The sacristan shook his head.

"Altro, altro," he said doubtfully. "Our people come hither to pray for relief from ophthalmia and rheumatism."

"And they obtain it?"

"Undoubtedly, signore—undoubtedly."

The Madonna squinted and her nose was sadly out of drawing. Lord Brackenbury thought to himself that so benevolent a Madonna might as well have been better looking. Perhaps his face betrayed his thoughts, for the old man, drawing a faded curtain over the picture, said, somewhat sharply, "It is very old, no one knows how old—and it has the beauty of holiness."

To this incontrovertible assertion Lord Brackenbury made the only answer open to an Englishman and a sceptic. He took out his purse, gave the sacristan a piece of money, and with a pleasant "Buon giorno" walked out again into the sunshine.

The old man looked at the coin, looked at the giver, looked at the coin again, and, with a chuckle of self-congratulation, pocketed the same.

"Per Bacco!" he muttered, lapsing into temporary paganism, "a scudo—a whole scudo! And I took him for a heretic!"

From the church Lord Brackenbury went down again to the beach, where the empty fishing-boats were drawn up in a long straggling row, battered, water worn, casting pure violet shadows on the white sands, with here and there an orange-tawny sail, or a much-mended net spread over the oars to dry. Here, among coils of rope, and empty fish baskets, and rusty anchors, and piles of shells and drift wood and withered sea-weed, and all the picturesque litter proper to a Mediterranean fishing village Lord Brackenbury sat him down upon a little creaking capstan, and watched the slow waves of the sea as it broke in creamy curves against the shore.

Two children, a boy and a girl, came to him presently, and a half, half shyly, half boldly, for "one little soldo."

"A soldo! What would you do with it?"

The boy hung back; the little girl hid her face against her brother's shoulder. A bronzed, bare-footed, amphibious little pair, to whom the sands, and the rocks, and the shells, and the sea-weeds, were as green slopes and wild flowers to the children of inland hills and valleys.

Lord Brackenbury beckoned them to come closer.

"What would you do with it?" he repeated.

Still they were silent, but seeing his fingers stray in the direction of his waistcoat pocket, they ventured a foot or two nearer.

Lord Brackenbury took out two little silver half-lire of Genoese currency, coins about four-pence each—it seems long since gone the way of the Roman Paul and the Neapolitan Carline.

"I will buy a tongue," said the boy, his eyes sparkling, his hand outstretched.

"And this little maiden?"

The boy gave her a push, and Lord Brackenbury, still withholding his coins, drew her gently to his side.

"What is your name?" he asked.

The boy answered for her.

"Felicita."

"And yours?"

"Giovanni."

"Ecco, Felicita. Giovanni has answered—therefore I give him not a soldo, but a mezzo lira! The other is yours, when you tell me how you will spend it."

The boy's fingers closed eagerly on the coveted coin. Then, like a young savage, he sprang back, fearing lest the giver should repent him of his gift. Felicita, left with the terrible stranger, looked uncertain whether to howl or run away.

"What! quite dumb? Very well, then! Felicita keeps her tongue to herself, and I keep my mezzo lira!"

And suiting the action to the word, Lord Brackenbury returned the money to his waistcoat pocket.

The child's lip quivered, and two big shining drops slipped slowly down her cheeks.

The half-lira was out again directly, and held before her eyes.

"Hush!—no tears, little one. See, here—what is it to be? [illegible]"

[illegible]

"Yes, I do know. I will buy a pair of [illegible] stockings."

Lord Brackenbury laughed.

"Oh, Eve! Eve!" he said. "Everywhere the same! Here, thou small daughter of Eve—here is thy half-lira, and another to the back of it—one for each little ear! Go on then, and hereafter thou shalt sell thy soul for dress!"

Unintelligible words, and yet the children were somehow conscious of their cynicism. The little girl, clutching her silver pieces, shrunk back and ran to her brother.

"What! not even a word of thanks?" said Lord Brackenbury.

Half glad, half frightened, they lingered for a moment hand in hand; then moved by a common impulse, fled away like young antelopes, and vanished among the boats.

Lord Brackenbury looked after them, and his face darkened. Was this the vaunted simplicity of untutored childhood? Blushed the flowery meads of Tempe and the vales of Arcady with such idyllic blossoms of cupidity and vanity? Was the Golden Age peopled with urchins, Giovannis and sixpence-trafficking Felicitas? Ay, verily—with such, and none other. A disjointed world! fair to look upon; rotten at the core!

He rose and strolled on, pausing now and then to look at the long line of land and water, on one hand, the palm crowned cliffs, the shimmering sands, the far-off frosted peaks; on the other—waveless, palpitating, melting into a golden haze on the horizon—the blue and dreamy sea.

"It would not be such a disagreeable world, after all, if there were no human beings in it," muttered Lord Brackenbury.

CHAPTER V.

OVER THE PASS OF BRACCO.

When Lord Brackenbury came back to the point from which he had started, he found Sandro Quaranta-Sette helping to put in fresh horses. So he settled down again into the roomy depths of the yellow calèche, ordered a cup of coffee to be brought out to him, and prepared to resume his journey.

Presently an old, old woman, with scant dishevelled locks and a skin like shrivelled parchment, tottered to the carriage window, mumbling for charity.

Lord Brackenbury felt for his purse; but a stalwart fisherman stepped out from among the bystanders, and drew the crone gently back.

"Pardon signore," he said, hastily, "we are not beggars, God be praised! But the mother is old, and her memory——" He stopped, touched his cap, and said, with a look of surprised recognition, "Ecco! the signore of the felucca!"

Lord Brackenbury smiled.

"And you," he replied, "are the carpenter who rigged up her bowsprit for me. That was the beginning of the rough weather, six weeks ago."

"The signore goes to sea in a cockle-shell when the hurricanes are out, and travels by land in a carriage and four when waters are smooth and skies are fair!"

"Why not? Don't you like wind enough to fill your sail when you put to sea?"

[illegible]

Lord Brackenbury shook his head.

"I shall not be along this coast again for a year," he replied. "I hope [illegible] the felucca."

"That's a pity," said the fisherman, carrying on his share of the conversation with the childlike familiarity of his class. "She's a sound little craft. If I had money enough I would have liked the refusal of her. The signore is going to La Spezia, but I am bound for Rome," replied Lord Brackenbury.

"Rome? Ah, I have a twin sister in Rome, whom I have not seen for six years. Rome is a long way off. I wish the signore was taking me with him!"

The postillions were by this time in their saddles, and Sandro Quaranta-Sette waited his lordship's pleasure to give the signal for starting. Mr. Pronting meanwhile looked on in amazed displeasure. Never had he seen his master talking so freely, smiling so pleasantly. If there was one thing in the world that Mr. Pronting hated more than another—and he hated most things and most people—it was low society. He prided himself on his conservatism. In Mr. Pronting's eyes a lord was a lord; a valet was a gentleman's gentleman; a fisherman in shirt sleeves was low society. He almost felt that it was his painful duty to give warning on the spot.

To be continued.

A WELL-KNOWN PHYSICIAN WRITES:

"It does not dry up a cough, and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but loosens it, cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of complaint."

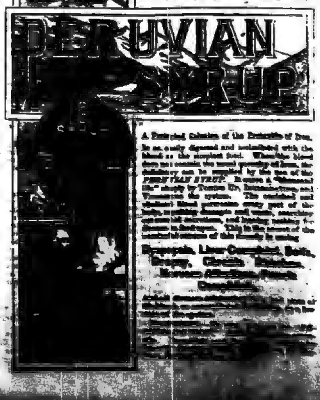
DO NOT BE DECEIVED by articles bearing a similar name. Be sure you get DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, with the signature of "I. BUTTS" on the wrapper. 50 Cents and $1.00 a Bottle. Prepared by Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston, Mass. Sold by druggists and dealers generally.



A Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. When the blood does not contain the usual quantity of iron, the deficiency can be supplied by the use of the PERUVIAN SYRUP. It cures a "thousand ills" simply by Toning Up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the system. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon. This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing
